When the Blind See

By LOUIS CUNNINGHAM

I MUST go to him myself, Parrish. I have so looked forward to surprising him."

Mrs. Gerald Irving, home from six months in Europe, had reached New York a day earlier than she had called her husband. Her maid held the door open for her as she entered the apartment.

"Just as if..." Parrish smiled fondly at her mistress — a face sweetly calmed by years of darkness and patient suffering.

"Blindness made you no less lovely, madam," and Parrish. "And you could see nothing finer than yourself."

Parrish watched her feeling the wall to her husband's study.

Gerald Irving moved hastily away from the woman who sat beside him. He put his finger to his lips, then touched his eyes to call to mind that she who stood in the door could not see them.

"Kitty! You wired you'd be on Wednesday's plane. And there was no one there to meet you!"

"I wanted to walk in on you like this when we were all alone and thinking of me," she cried.

"The woman moved noiselessly and stood by the mantle. Kitty took the place she had left. Gerald, an uneasy frown on his face, sat beside her."

"It is late," said the blind girl. "I knew I would find you alone. Have you been very lonely for me, Gerald? What did you do while I was away?"

"It has not been easy without you," he said.

"You never cared for anyone but me, Gerald, did you?" persisted Kitty. "I was no other woman."

"But there was, Kitty... a year before you came. I thought I loved her and she pretended to care for me. I was just a young lawyer then. I had nothing to offer and she married a wealthy man."

"You ceased to love her then, of course. Did you never see her again?"

"Yes, I saw her... recently."

"Tell me. What is she like? Is she prettier than I?"

"She is like you, tall, perhaps, with black hair and eyes as blue as yours. She is a woman of very red lips and a soulless face — a sort of woman whom it is death for a man to love."

The woman moved angrily. A different crimson from that which had colored her cheeks flooded her forehead. Gerald gazed in wonder. He smiled cynically. "She is all you describe. Even as you guess — for I know you never saw her... she is soulless. She was untrue to my love and she is now untrue to me."

"Her lips went to his."

The man who calls her wife. She is a temptress... even to one who is strong in an honest love. She came to me again and tried to win me back. But what she offers is dishonorable. I told her to go. You see my protection. I never want to see her again."

The woman looked at him with hatred. Then she picked up her wrap by the door and vanished.

"The girl's fingers caressed her husband's face and her lips went to his. Suddenly she pointed to his shoulder."

"See, Gerald, there is a hair on your coat. Wait, I will get it."

He stared in wonderment.

"Kitty, what is this? Am I dreaming? You... you can't see!"

"I went to a specialist in Vienna two months ago and have some of my sight back. That was why I came in surprise. And oh, I am glad that the first thing I saw about you is the honesty of your love. I had been without the use of my eyes too long to trust the value of what they first showed me... that woman with her arm about your neck. I knew if I were blind I would be happier, so I kept up the pretense and in blindness I saw what in light I might have missed."

OPPOSITES REPEL

Easygoing, indifferently educated Sam Jenkins married a school teacher, a precise, extremely erudite woman of decided opinions, and it was soon evident that they would never hit it off very well together. "I guess," commented one friend of the unfortunate Sam, "that you are overcome by your wife's powers of diction."

"Not at all, not at all," rejoined Sam. "What's got me licked is her slightly power of contradiction."

Diner: "Waiter, this soup is awfully weak."

YOU CAN'T WIN

The National league's reheaded "Dusty" Boggess injected sound reasoning into his profession during an exhibition game. A batter who was wearing glasses became somewhat annoyed at the way Boggess was calling strikes on him, and when the count had reached two and nothing he removed his glasses and offered them to the umpire.

Boggess gratefully accepted the glasses and adjusted them to his eyes. On the next pitch, he belted: "Strike three—you're out!"

Later he admitted quite frankly: "I couldn't see the ball with the batter's glasses on, so I concluded that he couldn't see it with his glasses on."

Laundry is Secondary
When a flood washed out the railway line to a small city where he was scheduled to make a campaign address, a vice-presidential candidate telegraphed the committee chairman:
"Cannot arrive on time. Washout on line."
He was startled to receive a telegraphic reply advising: "Never mind wash. Buy another shirt at our expense and come anyway."

"You are late again this morning. Don't you have an alarm clock?"
"Yes, sir, but it went off while I was asleep."

Lots of Exercise
A weak but ambitious young man once approached a great merchant and said, "May I ask you the secret of success?"
"There is no easy secret," replied the merchant. "You just jump at your opportunity."
"But, how can I tell when my opportunity comes?"
"You can't," snapped the merchant. "You have to keep jumping."

"You are late again this morning. Don't you have an alarm clock?"
"Yes, sir, but it went off while I was asleep."

LEARNING HOW

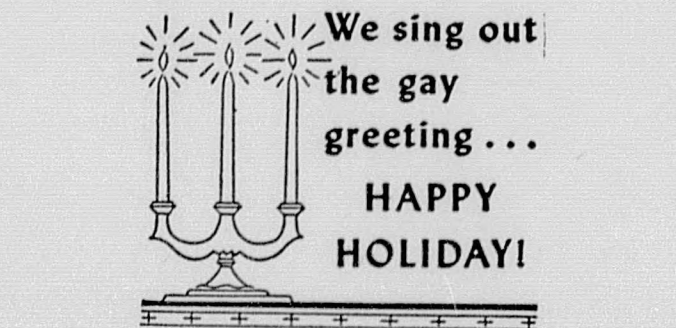

A preacher whose congregation regularly ignored seats in the front of the church was surprised to see one man, a stranger, in the very first row. After the sermon, the pastor asked the man why he sat down in front. The man replied that, being a bus driver, he wanted to find out how the preacher got people to move to the rear.

Two veterans were discussing a political busybody who usually campaigned on the sole issue of his war record.
"The trouble with Peabody," one observed, "is that he's always yelling about being ready to spill his last drop of blood—but he took mighty good care of the first drop."
"I dunno," said the second veteran. "In Germany he was always where the bullets were thickest."
"Where was that?"
"In the munitions depot."

A Head for Business

Two partners were arguing about what they should do to increase business in their theater. One maintained that people would come to covered with red leather; the other thought mohair more appropriate. Finally they turned to a third partner who was standing by silently. "Joe, you're not saying a word. What do you think about it?" "If you ask me," he replied, "I think we should cut the admission price and cover the seats with people."

The man on the bridge addressed the solitary fisherman.
"Any luck," he asked.
"No," was the answer.
"Why, I got 40 pike out of here yesterday."
"Do you know who I am?"
"No," said the fisherman.
"I'm the chief magistrate here, and all this estate is mine."
"And do you know who I am?" asked the fisherman, quickly.
"No."
"I'm the biggest liar in the United States."

And lots of it, for friends, old and new.

Good Excuse

LIKE many young couples, this one made the mistake of bringing Junior to the movies. The infant saw no reason why he should be quiet, but the manager did. "If you can't keep the kid quiet," the manager whispered harshly, "I'll have to ask you to leave."
The movie went on and turned out to be one of those interminable, boring productions. The husband, shifting uneasily in his seat, finally nudged his wife.
"Give Junior a punch," he moaned.

Two and Two Are Six
Julius Rosenwald, the financier and philanthropist, never took his success too seriously. "I could never understand the popular belief that because a man makes a lot of money he has a lot of brains," Rosenwald once said, and then told this story:

A certain man won a million dollars on number 14. When asked how he had figured it out, he said: "I had a dream in which I saw a great big 9, then the next night I dreamed I saw a great big 6, so I used my brains and figured that 9 and 6 is 14."

"I say, old chap, don't you ever take your wife out for a Sunday drive?"
"Nope. My car's getting old and I can't cope with both of them at the same time."

AND FAST, TOO

"I feel sure, my poor man," said the sympathetic old lady, visiting a state prison, "it was poverty that brought you to this."
"No, ma'am, quite the contrary," returned the prisoner. "It was being a coming money."

Naturally Skeptical

The good old country doctor came home all worn out and prepared for a good night's sleep, but no sooner had he retired than the phone beside his bed buzzed shrilly.
He nudged his wife: "Listen, Ma, see who it is; say you expect me soon, or anything you can think of."
The wife answered the phone. "Doctor is not at home," she said.
"Well, this is Mrs. Jones," rattled a voice in the receiver. "I got a pain and I want to see him as soon as he comes in."

The old doc whispered some instructions to his wife, which she repeated to the would-be patient. "Do that, and I'm sure you'll soon feel all right," she concluded.
"Thanks very much," said the lady on the phone, "but before I take your advice, tell me something. Is that gentleman who seems to be with you qualified to advise me?"

AS ADVERTISED

A beggar on New York's East Side was plodding along with a small dog. Around the dog's neck was a card on which was printed, "Pity the blind."
A businessman passed by after dropping a coin into the beggar's cup. Then he turned back.
"Wait," he said, "was that a 50-cent piece I gave you?"
"No," said the beggar, "it was only a quarter."
"So," the man said, "I thought so. You're not blind at all!"
"Heck, no," replied the panhandler. "It's the dog that's blind, not me."

NO WASTED WORDS

"I am a woman of few words," said the haughty mistress to the new maid. "If I beckon with my finger, I mean come."
"I am a woman of few words, too," replied the maid. "If I shake my head, I mean I ain't comin'."

Opportunist From Texas

A Texan was visiting the East, where he had occasion to attend the funeral of a man who was thoroughly disliked in the community.

At the service the minister, who was new in the parish, called upon someone to say a few words about the deceased. A long and significant silence ensued.

Finally, the true son of Texas arose and said: "Well, since there is no one present who has anything to say about our departed brother, I'd like a few minutes to tell you folks about Texas."

Night Prayers

The pride-and-joy of the household was saying her bedtime prayers. "And God bless—," she said, then stopped.

"Go on, darling," encouraged her mother.
"Wait a minute," murmured the small one, "until I think who is on my list."

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

"Do you find that advertising brings quick results?"
"It should say it does. Yesterday we advertised for a night watchman and last night the office safe was robbed."

MRS. HATCHER HOSTESS TO HOME DEMONSTRATION CLUB

Mrs. E. H. Hatcher was hostess to the Home Demonstration Club ladies at a spend-the-day party on December 15th. A turkey dinner with all the trimmings was served to 27 members and two visitors. The center piece for the table was a low bowl of pink poinsettias.

In the afternoon the president called the meeting to order. Miss Mathews told a Christmas story and led in prayer. Then an interesting demonstration was given on wrapping Christmas packages.

MISS JEAN MOORE AND MR. RICHARD WEAVER MARRIED IN CHURCH CEREMONY

The marriage of Miss Jean Moore to Minister Richard Weaver took place at the Church of Christ on Sunday, December 13, at four o'clock P. M. with minister J. C. Dixon officiating at a double ring ceremony.

The background for the altar was formed of smilax and giant ferns. Directly back of the altar there was a semi-circle arrangement of candles. In the center of the background was a massive cluster of white gladioli, snapdragons, mums and madonnas.

lilies tied with wide white satin ribbon. Floor baskets of the white flowers and branched candelabra holding seven tapers each flanked either side of the altar. Poinsettias were added a touch of greenery to the flower arrangements.

Small clusters of white carnations and lacy fern tied with white satin ribbon, marked the pews for the bride's family. Preceding the entrance of the wedding party, Miss Anna Fox played "To a Wild Rose" and "If God Left Only You". Miss Jean Moore sang "Because" and Miss Ella Wilkerson sang "Through the Years". While a choir composed of two soloists, Miss Frances Miles, Brian Furman and Carlton Whitman hummed "I Love You Truly", the candles were lighted by Max and Gail Moore, brothers of the bride. Mr. Kermit Crook and Mr. Billy Walsh, brothers-in-law of the bride, served as ushers.

Mr. Dwight Webb, another brother-in-law of the bride, was best man and Mrs. Dwight Webb was her sister matron-of-honor. She wore a lovely gown of gold tulle and carried a bouquet of orchid carnations from which hung streamers of orchid and gold satin ribbon. Her headband was made of gold ribbon and orchid and gold flowers.

He saw cold, tight lines etched about her lips. "No, Miss Justin, but Mr. Kibb can't see it any other way. Didn't you suspect any thing?"

"Certainly, I guess I looked puzzled, because each time when I handed Mr. Dymhart the money, he mentioned a change in the accounting rules."

"How can you prove it?" asked Miss Justin weakly.

"Well, it's a long chance," said Thorne, slapping his fist. "If I use and the corporation kids me out—I've been wanting to hang out a shingle for a long time."

MR. DYHART looked surprised as he ushered them into his living room. "Just leaving, Thorne, but business before pleasure. I suppose it's something to do with the audit."

"That's correct," said Thorne. "Dymhart," he purposely skipped along the "Mr.," "you had Miss Justin cash several checks recently, among to nearly $10,000."

"Ridiculous," smiled Dymhart. "I know nothing of any checks."

"We've practically discovered the guilty person," went on Thorne dryly, as he opened his case and removed a cancelled check. Thorne took a sheet of paper, placed the check on it, and flashed it before Dymhart's eyes.

"All you have to do, Dymhart," he said, "is copy the signature on this check!"

The manager's lips curled bitterly, but he took the pen. Thorne matched the pen. "Never mind, Dymhart, that's enough. This afternoon we asked every employee to copy that signature. Not one imitated. You did, and you're guilty. I reasoned, since the teller passed those checks, the signature, though doctored, is actually yours—disguised!"

A green Red Dymhart's lips. "I wanted to get the money back in time," he gasped. "I didn't mean to involve Miss Justin, but she was my secretary. Don't swear out a warrant, Thorne. I'll pay it all back. After they were in the street, Thorne took a deep breath. It made him tingle and look up at the stars pinned on a clear sky.

"Well, you're still a travelling auditor with a job so I guess you won't hang out your shingle," said Miss Justin softly.

Hanging The Shingle

RICHARD D. CARL

"IMAGINE a girl like Miss Justin getting into trouble!" exclaimed Mr. Kibb, the corporation's senior auditor. "You can't be sure about anyone!"

"This young assistant, Mark Thorne, looked his hands thoughtfully behind his head. "How about Dymhart, the manager?"

"Why, Dymhart's been with the company for years," said Mr. Kibb, as he left, "he sides, you've got to admit he's endorsed each check."

"Mr. Thorne," said a voice behind him as Mark studied the personnel files.

"I wasn't expecting you. Were you to work tonight?"

"No, I came to see you. I overheard you and Mr. Kibb talking about those checks and it had me worried. In some way wrong!"

"Pleasant," said Thorne. It was hard to know. He ran a nervous hand through his black hair. "You know about the checks—you cashed them?"

"Yes," he cashed the checks because Mr. Dymhart told me to. Wait—you don't believe I took all that money?"

"I don't believe it," said Thorne, slapping his fist. "If I use and the corporation kids me out—I've been wanting to hang out a shingle for a long time."

MR. DYHART looked surprised as he ushered them into his living room. "Just leaving, Thorne, but business before pleasure. I suppose it's something to do with the audit."

"That's correct," said Thorne. "Dymhart," he purposely skipped along the "Mr.," "you had Miss Justin cash several checks recently, among to nearly $10,000."

The Bride Came in on the Arm

RICHARD D. CARL

"The bride came in on the arm of her father who gave her in marriage. Her dress was white lace over satin and was made with light waist and full skirt. The sleeves were long and pointed at the wrists. Her veil of illusion caught at the crown with a cluster of orange blossoms. MISS JOINER, MR. TATUM AT FIRST METHODIST CHURCH IN TROY DEC. 3

An event of the early Christmas season was the marriage of Miss Dorothy Flake Joiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Flake Joiner to Durwood Wright Tatum, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Tatum of New Brockton, on Dec. 3 at five-thirty in the First Methodist Church of Troy.

Dr. Acton Middlebrooks performed the ceremony against a background of white foliage and green magnolia leaves. The chancel and altar decorations were baskets of white gladioli and chrysanthemums. Branched altar candelabra holding burning tapers carried out the Christmas motif.

Preceding the ceremony organ selections were played by Mrs. Violet Ervin. Miss Mary Vic Mauk rendered Claire de Lune. The Sweetest Story Ever Told was rendered by Hermal and Jessie Jordan read "Melody of Love" to a background of organ music. Mrs. Margaret Stevenson, soprano, sang the beautiful "Through the Years". As a benediction Miss Mary Price Stephens of Brantley sang "Prayer Perfect". The traditional wedding march from Lohengrin was sung by a chorus of 12 voices under the direction of G. A. Stevenson.

Ushers were Sherroll Tatum, Dick Barr, Jr., Harold Spencer, Gary Dorrell, Banks; Bernice Shepherd, Troy; and William Joiner, brother of the bride.

Arthur Heinz of Atlanta Ga. served as best man.

The bride's attendants were: Miss Mary Alice Kelley, Troy; Mrs. Sherroll Tatum, Banks; Mrs. Fred Taylor, Ft. Deposit; and Mrs. Alex Thompson, Union Springs. Mrs. Harold Spencer of Banks was matron of honor. All the attendants wore identical gowns of white taffeta with a marquisette neckline framed by a wide berth collar.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Mr. William Flake Joiner. She wore a gown of white slipper satin with marquisette neckline outlined by an appliqued leaf design of seed pearls. The full skirt flowed into a long court train. Her fingertip length veil of illusion cascaded from a cap and veil. She also wore a cap and veil. The bride carried a white velvet muff, centered with white gardenias.

The mother of the bride wore a black crepe gown and a corsage of white roses. Mrs. Tatum, mother of the groom, chose a gray crepe gown accented by a shoulder corsage of pink carnations.

The bride is a graduate of the Troy High School and State Teachers College. She received her B. S. degree in secondary education. She was very active in the music department of the college, acting as accompanist to the choir. The young couple left immediately after the ceremony for a wedding trip to Florida. They will reside in Banks.

CHRISTMAS

By PATRICIA SINCLAIR

AVIS stood inside the spacious hall of the Carney home with her small overnight bag at her feet and greeted the slim girl approaching her. Merry Christmas, Barbara! Oh, it's so beautiful outside! She looked down at the snow on the tree of her small white boots. "I hate to track it in," she said.

"Don't worry about that. I'm so happy you came," Barbara smiled and helped Avis remove her snow-covered garments.

"Oh, I wouldn't have missed coming for all the world," Avis said, and meant it, now that she was actually there. Her dark eyes swept the attractive, decorated home and the inviting fire that roared in the grate.

Avis laughed, and her eyes glowed as they lifted to meet Steve's.

about huge logs in an immense fireplace in the room beyond. "I hope you'll enjoy yourself," Avis said. "My guests have not all arrived. Would you like to go up to your room first and get your things?"

"Take the shine from my nose! Yes, thanks so much," Avis responded eagerly, knowing that she needed a few repeating touches after the long trip out to the Carney home by bus.

As she ascended the stairs she thought, how right Barbara had been when she'd told her the other day, after inviting her to her home for the week-end and a Christmas party. "You can't stay in your apartment alone on Christmas. You can't become a recluse just because some fellow preferred another girl to you. You should start all over again."

Barbara was like that. At times Avis couldn't help envying Barbara's carefree, unstable attitude toward men. Barbara would never know the sting of loneliness, the bitter yearning for someone who had become the purpose of life itself.

Avis hadn't told Barbara, nor anyone, everything about her acquaintance with Steve Ross. She hadn't even told Barbara his name. There was no point in going into detail and revealing: "I crossed three states just to get away from the sight of him constantly with the new blonde who came to town."

Avis could hear Barbara's response to such a revelation. "No, but she was ever won by an army of cowards!" But Avis wasn't built that way.

SOMEONE AT CHRISTMAS

By CARL FREEMAN

THE little gift shop was crowded when Nancy entered it, but almost immediately she noticed the disturbance at sight of him, and receding the trend of her thoughts for the past several minutes brought a flush of warmth to her cheeks. She'd been thinking, somewhat resentfully, as she went along the busy streets of the little town, how unfair it was that Christmas had come before she could get acquainted with someone in Davenport—Larry Bryant, for instance, department head at the electric plant where she worked. Christmas wasn't Christmas unless it could be shared with someone.

And now Larry was standing at the dish counter deciding about a pair of little green rabbit ears and pepper shakers. It didn't matter particularly that he'd buy the shakers—she'd bought them for him—because of such an act—but she'd had her own heart set on them more or less for weeks. Larry had been in the shop every afternoon that she'd been there, but this was his first time at the dish counter. The little shakers were as good as gone.

The other day when she'd looked at them, the sales girl had said, "Better buy them. These are the last ones, and they are a bargain at eight dollars. They came all the way from Sweden."

"I know," Nancy had said, but she had thought they'd be an extravagance and look out of place on the little table in her corner.

He stopped in front of Carter's store, but minutes passed before he realized that he'd stopped there. He had no more. There'd be only memories of other Christmas days—dying about him at the swirling snow, and the plans he and Maggie'd made for this Christmas even before they'd carried the last would pass without realization, now that Maggie wasn't here to help him carry them through.

With Maggie Gone

By CAROLYN GRANT

IT WAS late when old Dan left the country where he worked, and snow fell in great flakes from the dark sky. He stopped for a moment along a street, unmindful of the eager passersby and their thoughtless jostling against him in their haste on this last night before Christmas. He lifted his face so that the soft flakes fell against his cheeks and melted in cold little drops of water that sought the deep lines sixty odd years had put there.

Snow was a part of Christmas, and after days of hesitancy it had come—just as he and Maggie had always wanted it. "Snow makes the lights seem brighter in the store windows, along the decorated streets of our little town and in our home on our unadorned cedar tree. We haven't missed many Christmas, Dan, having our snow," it seemed long ago since Maggie had said that. Years, it seemed. Yet it had been their front window looking out at the dark sky, and Maggie's said words almost like a prayer.

Dan sighed and let his chin drop into the upturned collar of his overcoat and started on. He wished the snow hadn't come. With Maggie gone, he could hardly bear the soft falling of down about him. He wanted to close his eyes against its bright gleam, but he couldn't. He was slipping up it. He wanted to close his eyes against the soft music that came from the street lights, but he couldn't. He was slipping up it. He wanted to close his eyes against the soft music that came from the street lights, but he couldn't. He was slipping up it.

Christmas had come again. But for him there'd be no Christmas—

About People and Things

By C. B. McDowell

Pardon Me

You just can't keep that fellow Tobe Rendes down. The other day he took his bird puppy and shotgun out in the woods near his home to train the puppy. A bird flew up and not realizing how close he was to the Mayo Prescott home, he shot and peppered Mrs. Prescott with the fine bird shot.

Tobe returned to his home and related the incident to his wife, who insisted that he go and apologize to Mrs. Prescott. Not having had any experience in apologizing to women for shooting them, he was at a loss for something to say, but at the insistence of his wife, he went to the Prescott home and knocked on the door. When Mrs. Prescott appeared he told her:

"Mrs. Prescott, I'm terribly sorry I shot you, but I thought you were my wife, Willie, and she has needed shooting for two years, and this is the first opportunity I have had." Mrs. Prescott burst out laughing to end the bad situation and Tobe's difficult problem was solved.

Appreciated Presents

My Sunday School class of the Methodist church presented me with a much appreciated gift consisting of a dozen handkerchiefs and a half dozen pairs of socks. Evidently the members of the class want their teacher to keep his nose clean and his feet smelling sweet. Many thanks.

Turkey Comes Back

Dr. W. R. Crook reported several days before Christmas that his large turkey had disappeared from his poultry yard and although he had scoured the nearby woods and whole countryside, no turkey was to be found. He said that his next door neighbor, Mrs. Dozier Brown, missed one of her hens the same morning, so it was supposed that the turkey and hen were both stolen. When he returned from hunting the turkey Dr. Crook missed a cigarette lighter, a Father's Day gift from his son, John Revel, which he thought was in the pocket in the turkey. However, in due course of time, he found the lighter right where he had left it on the reading table. He was so thankful of finding the lighter he became reconciled to the loss of the turkey.

But his blessings did not come singly. A day or two later a colored man told him he saw a turkey roaming around in the woods west of the Crook home. Shouldering his gun, Dr. Crook took to the woods and found the missing turkey which seemed to be trying to find his way back home.

Are You Ready?

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Smith, Miss Eunora Farris, and Misses Helen Braswell, and Martha Rainier spent Christmas Day as guests of Judge and Mrs. L. A. Hutchison and family in Panama City, Florida. They relate a humorous incident that happened while they were there.

Judge Hutchison was reading his paper when his three year old grandson appeared and asked, "Papa, are you ready?" The Judge asked, "Ready for what," and the boy replied, "The Judgement Day."

Question and answer nearly stampeded the household.

KINSTON SENIOR CLASS HAS FIRST PARTY OF YEAR

The Senior III class of Kinston High School had its first party of the year last Tuesday night at the home of Miss Lela Grimes. The home was very attractive with its decoration of the Yuletide colors.

A variety of games were played after which the group was served hot dogs, cookies and Coca-colas.

Attending the party were Merle Davis, William Bess, Buddy Clark, Jane Wise, Edwin Baker, Mary Emma Goodson, Edna Brooks, Evelyn Richardson, Joyce Anderson, Louise Caldwell, and Mr. and Mrs. Bryant Steel.

Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Bragg, of Birmingham, are guests of the parents, Dr. and Mrs. G. Bragg this week. Mr. Bragg has recently completed work for a B. S. degree from Howard college.

Fire In Samson Takes One Life; Three Buildings

Survey Reveals That Pond Will Cover Seventy-five Acres

Erin F. Paul, representing the Elba Lions Club, says that every thing is now in readiness to start work on the county-wide fish pond except the required $3,000 necessary to pay for the 200 acres of land.

A considerable portion of the $3,000 has been raised but more than half is still lacking. The state has earmarked $35,000 for the project and is ready to start work as soon as the reeve the deed to the land. The state will pay all costs of constructing the pond, stocking it with fish, fertilizing it and furnishing a permanent caretaker. The only expense to the citizens of the land is the price of the land, a deed to which is required before construction work can begin.

Mr. Paul said the necessary legal papers have been drawn and everything is now waiting on the $3,000 to pay for the land. According to Mr. Paul, some of the rural districts have done better in
